WILSON NEW PM BUT MAY FACE HOUSE DEADLOCK

By HAROLD MORRISON

LONDON (CP) - Harold Wilson was named prime minister of Britain today as his Labor party emerged with a thin margin from Thursday's general election.

The 48-year-old socialist chief accepted a summons from the Queen to form a government shortly after Conservative Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home had tendered his resignation to the monarch.

Wilson then returned from Buckingham Palace to 10 Downing Street, the official residence of the prime minister.

Standing in the doorway there he said:

"I would like to pledge myself and my colleagues to work together for the good of our country. We are facing very great problems, but I am con-fident we can overcome them." Douglas-Home earlier drove from the prime minister's residence to the palace in the historic tradition of the change of government, marking the end of 13 years of Conservative Afterward, the former nobleman commented that the result had been "very close," and added that he and his party will 'do our best, when we come to meet in Parliament, to uphold the interests of the nation. With results in from all but four of the 630 constituencies, the Labor party held 316 seats in the House of Commons to 303 for the Conservatives and seven for the Liberal party of Jo Grimond. FINAL SATURDAY Of the four remaining seats

Next: An Internal Struggle

By PHIL NEWSOM-

UPI Foreign News Analyst

BUCHAREST, Romania (UPI) - Nikita S. Khrushchev's sudden retirement as all-powerful leader of Soviet Russia sets the stage for another internal struggle such as those which followed the deaths of V. I. Lenin and Josef Stalin.

But, while the designation of Alexei Kosygin and Leonid Brezhnev to their respective posts as premier and first party secretary again represents a division of authority, it seems unlikely to produce any immediate violent result.

Stalin had to overcome Leon Trotsky within the party after the death of Lenin. Khrushchev had to overcome the so-called anti-party group within the Central Committee and the Presidium in the persons of former premier Georghi Malenkov and Vyacheslav M. Molotov.

Both were many months in the process. Brezhnev has been regarded as Khrushchev's handpicked ccessor, and as first party secretary takes over the most important of the two jobs.

Favored K's Co-Existence Policy

Both Brezhnev and Kosygin have been regarded as meen favorable to the Khrushchev co-existence policy.

Moseow dispatches appear to indicate some doubt as to the validity of the announcement that Khrushchev's retirement-came about as a result of age and health. But Khrushchev himself has remarked in the past that he would not live forever and this, in that light, could be regarded as his own move to attempt an orderly succession. The other side of the coin is the fact that there has been opposition within the party both to his hard-line stand against

Communist China and to his agricultural policies at home. So far as this East European capital is concerned, the general population did not know about it until morning. The announcement came after midnight here and was not in general

But it is certain to create concern and apprehension.

This correspondent, in the midst of a swing through East European Communist capitals, has found a generally relaxed atmosphere among both people and government officials.

It has been tempered by obvious concern over just how long such an atmosphere of slowly relaxing tension with the West could or would continue, and when or if Moscow might shift suddenly to the harded line of Stalin.

Hungary, Romania Most Relaxed

The atmosphere of relaxed tension has been most apparent in Hungary and Romania, less so in Bulgaria which is almost totally dependent upon Moscow for financial aid and which in the last year has received Soviet credit of around $500 million.

Departure in Mystery

Soviet Union has sprouted a crop of question marks around the

The official Moscow announcement through Pravda that Mr. Khrushchev's successors will make no changes in his policies came hard on the heels of the original announcement and reflected Russia's appreciation that this would be the chief question discussed in every legislature on earth.

But the assurance has not stilled the queries, for it is suspected that two Khrushchev supporters who will now share his offices of party secretary and premier may not be permanent incumbents but merely interim office holders.

Of almost equal interest is the manner of Mr. Khrushchev's unheralded going. Now the Western analysists are trying to tot up the score of the leader's successes and failures to see what may have caused the sudden move. The formal reasons of health and age are conceded to be possible but not, in view of Mr. Khrushchev's recent virile appearances, likely. On the other hand, it was only a few days ago that the 70-year-old head of state commented publicly to the effect that he could not be in office forever. But was this a hint of voluntary retirement or of ouster?

There are a number of adverse items which the Soviet Communist Central Committee might chalk up against the man who for the past eleven years has held the powerful office of premier and for a lesser time the still more powerful office of Party secretary,

There is, for instance, the matter of the recent widespread crop failure and the failure of the great "new lands" reclamation project. The need for huge purchases of grain from the West could not have been a pleasant pill for Kremlin officialdom to swallow.

There is the situation with regard to Red China, which finds the two great Communist powers at ideological loggerheads and even threatening force to settle recurrent border disputes. Arising from this there is the growing move to-wards independence amongst the Communist parties of the satellite countries and of the world, with some who do not actively side with Peking seeking a status more inde-

These could all be identified as failures or signs of weakness in Mr. Khrushchev's personal leadership of the Party and the country.

The quick announcement that policy would remain unchanged suggests that it was merely Mr. Khrushchev who was found unacceptable, and not his programs. The West will fervently hope that this is so. The past few years had seen great progress made in cooperation between East and West. It would be a saddening and alarming development if this trend were

More immediate effects of the Moscow news will be observed in the United States, where a gettough policy in Moscow could have serious repercussions on the American presidential race. Undoubtedly Mr. Goldwater's position would be strengthened and Mr. Johnson's made more difficult by a deterioration of the currently peaceful relations between the two countries. The effects in Peking will also be interesting, as the world waits to see if this develop-ment will widen or heal the breach between the two great Communist powers, and whether Red China will gain from Russia's change in leader-

Regardless of other considerations, the West will recognize that it has lost an Eastern leader who had become successively less an adversary and more and more a serious world statesman, promoting his own country's interests wherever possible but fully alive to the responsibilities of statesmanship, and of humanity, in a nuclear world.

One other item of interest remains. It appears that Russia has now achieved a political state in which changes in authority can be effected without Stalin-type purges. Party: Rigid or Flexible?

DESPITE the Conservative showing in the British election, some thoughtful Republicans in Washington maintain that their party could profit immensely from a close study of recent Tory his-

In every poll that is taken in the United States, almost 50 per cent of the voters say that they regard themselves as conservatives. Yet the Republicans have managed to hold national power for only eight years since 1933. By con-trast England's Conservative Party has dominated its government for all of that period except the six years between 1945

The Republicans quickly shrugged off their stunning defeat in 1948 as a personality rejection of Thomas E. Dewey. They ignored the example of the Conservatives in England, who had been stimulated by the shock of their 1945 reversal into a rigorous modernization of their party's structure and pro-

A department store executive with limited experience in elective politics, Lord Woolton, became chairman of the party and undertook to discover and correct the fallings that had permitted Winston Churchill's government to fall. He approached the party exactly as if it were a foundering business.

Woolton has since retired but his structural improvements still serve his party well. The Conservatives employ a full-time professional agent in every constituency. This gives them a marked advantage over the Labor Party, which is staffed in only one-third of the contuencies. As a result Conservative volunteers are better trained in the arts of campaign canvassing.

New Members

Woolton launched a young Conservative Movement, a Conversative Educa-tion Movement, a house-to-house camion Movement, a house-to-house cam-paign for new party members and a drive to raise a huge "fighting fund." These activities erased the impression of 1945 that the party was dead and shar-pened appetites for the election ahead. Meanwhile a group of Conservative intellectuals, men like R. A. Butler, Iain MacLeod, Reginald Maulding and Ed-ward Heath, sat down to resum the ward Heath, sat down to revamp the party program. The reactionaries had been sufficiently discredited in the 1945 returns to yield considerable license to ese young party philosophers.

They undertook to revive the alliance that Benjamin Disraeli constructed in the last century between the Conservative Party and the British working man. Disraeli committed the Conservatives to uphold the Empire and elevate the condition of the people. He echoed Aristotle's assertion that "Society was continued in order that they may live

This unlikely union between the Tories and the workers was facilitated by the diversion into the Liberal Party of many industrialists and merchants who saw their profits in squeezing the laboring class. Free of these repressive forces, Disraeli fought to establish as Conservative doctrine a recognition of the responsibility as well as the rights of ownership.

Similar Spirit

In a similar spirit the party charter adopted in the late 1940's affirmed the duty of the British government to insure a high level of employment and to prevent human misery. The Conserva-tives also accepted Lord Keynes' thesis, which still divides the Republican Party, that if the economy is stalled by inadequate private investment, the government must take up the slack.

The momentum generated by this revival carried the party through three consecutive elections into 13 years of power. The refreshening has now worn off and the fuddy-duddy aspect of the Conservative Party has partially returned. Nevertheless a London newspaper, The Observer, declared two weeks ago that the Tories had been more convincing in asserting a readiness to accept the Welfare State than the Labor Party had been in asserting its readiness to accept the profit motive.

The British Conservatives faced squarely up to the issue of whether they preferred a rigid party that stood on tradition or a flexible party adapted to the times. The Republicans have long fudged their answer to this question. The British experience suggests that a clearcut progressive stand may be more

ART AND THE MAN

Great artists must reserve their greatness for their art that the minor poet is always more interesting than the major poet—as a man, that is; as a human personality. May I add my congratulations (with-out totem pole) to John Gough and the anonymous mother for their outstanding contribution to the increase in sales of The Catcher in the Rye. J. D. INSIDE POLITICS

With Douglas Fisher, M.P.

It was probably the intensity and volume of Royal visit news that saved me from press attention for an embarrassing goof last Friday in the Commons. There's poetic justice in seeing a critic of political performances hung up high on his own tree. Just as a heaver of brick-bats it seems the fair thing to describe how I, as Joe Greene (Lib.-Renfrew South) put it, became " . . the only Member of Parliament—his claim to fame may be slight— who may be recorded in the annals of Parliament for one thing, namely as being the only man ever to introduce two bills in the same private members hour."

Private members' hour on Fridays usually finds the House down low in numbers and with the holiday on Monday there was just over a quorum of 20 when I began my way-

What bill is taken on private members' time is usually a matter of negotiation by the Liberal whip with the half-dozen member's public bills. I have half-a-dozen on the list and poked it had been some weeks since I had looked at it. At mid-week the Liberal whip's assistant had phoned me and asked me if I would be ready to go Friday. I asked what was next and he said, "your Judas-tree bill!"

Now two of the private private bills I have were given fancy titles. Each would amend the Criminal Code and in order to distinguish them clearly from other would-be amendments to the code I labelled one on conflict of interest the "Judas Tree Amendment" the other, which would protect crown appointees, "A Purge for the King's Evil." These fancy titles were my

A Clumsy Device

"A Purge for the King's Evil" had been debated several times before and I knew its limited purpose well. There was not much new that I could say about it. It was designed to take a crack at the practise of letting out appointees of previous governments after the election, without giving the official any notice.

"The Judas-Tree" amendment was a very clumsy device adopted so I could bring up the issue of mutual fund companies which hire what seems to be an investment advisory firm to place its money at a fixed percentage of

In many cases these advisers are a dupliation, in a separate corporate form, of the executive of the mutual fund company. In other words, there are men who get rewards from both companies. Since securities and exchange matters do not come directly under the federal authority, I had to reach to the Criminal Code in order to tackle the question. I had gathered a fair amount of debating material, largely from U.S. financial sources. em is creating a lot of dis-

For some reason I confused it with the King's Evil and, more reprehensibly, I never glanced at our printed order of business. By mid-afternoon Friday the House was enmeshed in a debate on proposals for House reform brought forward by the Speaker's committee on procedure. Every MP tends to be an authority on the subject and more than 20, including all the party leaders, got into it. Around 3:30 p.m. Eldon Wooliams had moved an amendment for the Tories,

Clattered On

I was much like most members in wanting to see the motion through so I inquired if we should give up the private members' hour at 5 p.m. in order do get the reform motion through. My colleagues concurred and I took the offer to the Liberal House leader, as coming from the member whose bill was coming up. The offer was acceptable, if it became a necessity.

About 4:30 p.m. more time for the reform motion seemed certain and I assumed it was most unlikely I would be up. So I left the chamber and went to another part of the building for some reading. Just at 5, I came back in to find the procedure debate had suddenly collapsed and private members' hour was proceeding. In jig time my Bill-C56 was called and I began to give a very general outline on the merits of my bill C-11.

The general nature of my remarks and my claim that the bill was minor and not of "extreme importance" was the likely cause of the six or seven minutes that the speaker and the other MPs let me clatter along.

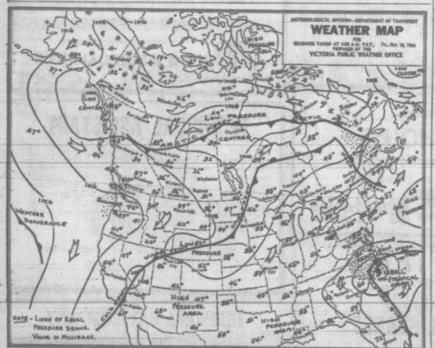

Finally, Mr. Greene got up on a point of der. "Is he on the wrong page, on the wrong chapter, and playing a record he meant to play last year?

I was flabbergasted and plunked down to scan the order list while Mr. Greene went on to say: "I suggest he is on the wavelength of the King's Evil, rather than the Judas Tree. That is the problem with having such a literary mind: One can never be sure exactly what wavelength one is on."

Mr. Greene was so right and there I was with a bill I had never spoken about before, and all my files on it several hundred yards away. There was much hilarity and chaffing. There would have been much more if the House would have been fuller, I had to bumble onto the real subject of the Bill C56. There isn't much question that I put up about the most confused and awkward case for a bill that the Commons has seen. My ad-libbing soon dried up and I surrendered the floor to David Hahn (Lib.—Broadwiew.)

The simplest moral of the story for an MP is: always read the order paper closely. The other moral is that a columnist MP should beware of Judas Trees

'K' Era Dies Easy In Its Birthplace

MOSCOW (UPI)- The Khrushchev era died easy,

I walked the streets of Moscow and I heard no weeping, no cheering.

I saw a city of seven million awed by the passing of the short, rotund little man who ended the police terror, filled the grocery store shelves and promised more to come. It seemed all Moscow had been hit with the passing of a favorite uncle, a political Santa Claus, "It is so sudden, so sudden," a taxicab driver said. "Nikita Sergeyevich, he must have had a stroke or something of the like."

A middle-aged woman with a wart on her nose and a kerchief over her hair and a mop in her hand was marching past one of the city's newspaper bulletin boards. She cast a casual glance at the pasted-up paper. She jerked to a halt, turned and stared, inching closer to the print, pausing and then backing off quickly.

She bit a lip.

A few Russians slowly stepped across the massive parade field of the Communist world and looked at the high red walls of the Kremlin fortress. They looked as if they were trying to inspect tomorrow.

I saw something new. At intervals of about 400 feet sat those familiar, drab, dull Volga automobiles that the city's finest use when they wear plainclothes.

I could not say whom they belonged to. But in each car sat two men with blank faces, watching and waiting. I spoke to a Russian who said, "I do not think they are Couples parked for petting."

The Russians did not laugh. I talked to another Russian, away from Red Square, and asked him about Khrushchev's passing.

"Now Nikita Sergeyevich will have plenty of time for fishing," said the Russian and he seemed envious.

I went to my hotel, one of Stalin's wedding cake sky-scraper specials which after a few weeks you get to like, the way you grow fond of your first automobile

On each floor of a Russian hotel sits a polite but no-nonsense woman. Mine looks like my eighth grade math teacher and when I told her the news, she gave me the look I got when I didn't do my homework.

"I do not want to discuss it," she said.

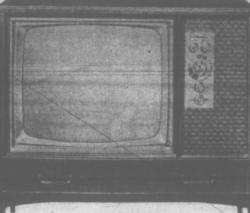

As I walked down the hall I looked back and saw her talking excitedly with a maid.

Cardinal president August A. Busch, Jr., announced at a news conference that the 52-year-old spunky Irishman had decided to submit his resignation on Sept. 28 before the Cardinals had won the National League pennant.

"This is to submit my resignation as field manager of the Cardinals at the end of the National League season," Keane's letter to Busch had said.

The full text of Keane's letter to Busch said:

"This is to submit my resignation as field manager of the St. Louis Cardinals effective at the end of the last championship National League game, whether it be the end of the regular season or at the completion of the World Series.
"I want you to know that I have enjoyed working for you since you have owned the Cardinals, as well as the many years I spent within the organization prior to that time."

Busch Got the Letter This Morning

Keane said in his letter of resignation: "I regret very much the necessity of this decision, especially severing the close relations I have had with no many of the Cardinals' personnel."

Keane also said: "I resign my position with the friendliest of feelings and wish nothing but success to you and to your fine Cardinal team."

Busch disclosed that he received Keane's letter this morn ing after Thursday night's "victory celebration" at which Keane and the champion Cardinals were feted until the wee hours of Keane had declined to reveal his plans as late as last night, except to say "I want to get back to Houston, my home, as soon as I can."

The 52-year-old Keane had been counted out of the National League race in September when reports circulated that he would be fired at the end of the season.

A Cardinal front office shakeup last month, said to have been touched off by 83-year-old Branch Rickey, the club's senior consultant, resulted in the firing of general manager Bing Devine and business manager Art Routzong.

You did not give me your height but it is evident that you are a lot overweight. I know that this is a burden to you now and will become more so all the time. When one as young as you are is as much overweight as you are, I think it is wise to consult your family physician. He may give you a metabolism test and find that some medication is advisable along with calorie counting.

With him again.

Q. I am 13, four feet, four inches tall and weigh only 58 pounds. What can I do?

A. You are only about five or six pounds underweight and, if you have a very small build, perhaps not that much. Add a few extras to a well-planned diet, such as a chocolate milk shake at mid-afternoon or before going to sleep at night and some cookies and fruit juice in the middle of the morning.

VANCOUVER (CP) - Karl Helmik, 41, owner of the Crown Hotel here, told court Thursday he foiled a robbery by throwing black pepper in the eyes of a youth who clubbed him on the head with a piece of pipe. Helmik, testifying at the trial of Deryk Point, 20, of Vancouver, said he carried the pepper in his pocket for just such an occasion.

Four of Jupiter's moons were spotted by the great astronomer Galileo, when he turned his small telescope upon the heavens way back in the year 1610. WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Lyndon Johnson said today
Red China's explosion of a nuclear device was more of a tragedy to the Chinese people than it was a threat to world peace.

It gave no details on the size or type of the device.

"The Chinese government hereby solemnly declares that China will never at any time and under conditions be the first to use nuclear weapons... the Chinese people can be trusted," the statement added.

It called for an all - nation summit conference to discuss banning and destroying all nuclear weapons.

WILSON NEW PM BUT MAY FACE HOUSE DEADLOCK

By HAROLD MORRISON

LONDON (CP) - Harold Wilson was named prime minister of Britain today as his Labor party emerged with a thin margin from Thursday's general election.

The 48-year-old socialist chief accepted a summons from the Queen to form a government shortly after Conservative Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home had tendered his resignation to the monarch.

Wilson then returned from Buckingham Palace to 10 Downing Street, the official residence of the prime minister.

Standing in the doorway there he said:

"I would like to pledge myself and my colleagues to work together for the good of our country. We are facing very great problems, but I am confident we can overcome them."

Douglas-Home earlier drove from the prime minister's residence to the palace in the historic tradition of the change of government, marking the end of 13 years of Conservative

MINISTERS NAMED

LONDON (Reuters)—Harold Wilson, Britain's new Labor prime minister, tonight named Patrick Gordon Walker, 47, foreign secretary in his new cabinet.

He named Denis Healey, 47, defence secretary, and James Callaghan, 52, chancellor of the exchequer.

Wilson named George Brown, 50, first secretary of state and minister for economic affairs. Brown will act as prime minister when Wilson is out of the country and is clearly regarded as No. 2 in the gov-ernment without being given

LONDON (Reuters)-Harold Wilson, Britain's new Labor prime minister, tonight named Patrick Gordon Walker, 47, foreign secretary in his new cabinet.

He named Denis Healey, 47, defence secretary, and James Callaghan, 52, chancellor of the exchequer.
